

Ways to supplement your income: Lunchtime supervisor

Business model	Qualities required	Training required	If you're not sure yet...	Typical working hours	Location	Regulatory requirements	Projected income
A lunchtime supervisor provides support to a primary, secondary or special education school during the lunch period each day. This role involves supervising the children to ensure their safety, as well as helping to clear away after lunch.	Love of working with children, confidence in ensuring safety and wellbeing. Flexible, reliable, enthusiastic. Communication skills.	No formal training or qualifications are required to be a lunchtime supervisor or break assistant.	You could volunteer for other roles at a local school, such as helping the children with reading or lunchtime activities. Check to see if local schools are advertising to find out the type of role and salary being offered in your local area.	Hours vary depending on the school's requirements. However, roles typically involve working two hours a day during term time. Hours may be extended during COVID, as lunchtimes may be staggered.	Lunchtime supervisors work on the school premises, usually in the school hall and playground.	Lunchtime supervisors require an enhanced DBS check. Having a valid paediatric first aid certificate is also helpful for this role.	Salaries vary depending on the area, school and number of hours required. Hourly rates are typically between around £8 and £12 an hour.